

GRACE HOGG, IN MEMORIAM

Grace Hogg

W.S. Richards

Grace Hogg, a long-time Saskatoon member of the Society, died on May 13, 1989. Jim Hogg, her husband, predeceased her in 1976.

Grace taught school, her field being art and she studied under several artists. She exhibited extensively, including exhibitions and one-woman shows provincially and nationally, and some of her works are held in foreign as well as Canadian collections. On occasion she made sketches for provincial and local Society events.

A delightful mix of the native and the exotic, her garden reflected an artistic eye and an inherent love of plants. Jim's interest in birds and Grace's in wildflowers, the pair were informed and popular leaders of local outings. More than once Grace was a helpful and a sub-leader on Society summer field trips.

Avid campers and lovers of the outdoors, they regularly attended summer meets from the beginning of these popular Society events in the 1950s, missing but two in 22 years. Grace and Jim were enthusiastic participants and willingly helped in the tasks necessary for such affairs to be successful. Together they devoted much time to each of their three main associations — the Saskatoon Art Centre, the Saskatoon Camera Club and the Saskatchewan and Saskatoon Natural History societies. Recently, Grace donated books to the provincial society.

In her own quiet way, through active participation and continuing presence, Grace, like other steadfast members who have passed on, nurtured and enhanced the Society. She was a cheerful friend of us all. — Jim A. Wedgwood, 610 Leslie Avenue, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. S7H 2Z2
